

The United States has often been called a nation of immigrants.

In 1920, 40% of the population consisted of immigrants or the children of immigrants.

Many immigrants came to escape poverty and starvation.

Others came to get away from religious persecution or cruel governments.

People saw the opportunity to start a better life here in America.

However, they soon would discover, succeeding in America took a lot of hard work and a little bit of luck.